Home of the Tigers!

A Note from Ms. Pierce

Criticism, sarcasm, and silence are the language of judgment. This language creates roadblocks to communication and connection. It is used instead of the language of feelings. The language of feelings creates a bridge from problem to solution, from rejection to connection.

Shifting from the language of judgement to the language of feelings requires a pause. Discovering feeling words changes the intent of communication from judging (attacking) to sharing (connecting).

Are you willing to commit?

As soon as I feel myself becoming emotional, I will take a breath and find the right feeling word. The sooner I become aware of my emotions, the better my chances are of creating a tiny pause between feeling the emotion and the impulsive action it might elicit.

Here are some examples of helpful language shifts:

Judgement - You are just trying to make this hard!

Feeling - I feel anxious that we are having trouble.

Judgement - You don't care about me.

Feeling - I feel disappointed. I was hoping we could have more time together.

Judgement - Don't lie to me!

Feeling - I feel confused. Please help me understand.

During this time of COVID, it can be hard to see the best and notice instead of judge. When you are feeling upset, I encourage you to take a deep breath and see the best and find a solution.

As always, we wish you well!

Love,
Ms. Pierce
