Home of the Tigers!

A Note from Ms. Pierce

Tom Brady completes about 64% of his football passes and he has amazingly won six Super Bowls and is in pursuit of his tenth Super Bowl appearance.

Some great baseball players have a batting average of 30% which means they make an “oops” 70% of the time they step up to the plate.

Michael Jordan, one of the greatest basketball players ever, made about 50% of the shots he took.

While it's great to have high expectations, or very high expectations, we must live within the reality that we'll never be perfect. In life we will all fumble, strike out, foul, or double fault. When children make mistakes, or experience “oops” on the field, in school, or at home, we need to accept the “oops” and let it be a learning and growing tool.

1. Instead of blaming others, own the “oops” and teach children how to own theirs. “Oops, you spilled the milk. Sponge or rag?”
2. When children make mistakes, offer empathy, listen to understand, and validate feelings. “You seem disappointed. You were hoping to score a goal.” Offer lots of encouragement to instill courage that helps children get back up to try again and again. May our “oops” be stepping stones to propel us to walk forward and may we love and encourage each other knowing we are all perfectly imperfect!

“Want to be happy? Stop trying to be perfect.” Brene Brown
